Yes, it's still with David as per CCM. I also checked with Karine on Friday before I left and she confirmed that it was with David.

What is your deadline for approvals?

I know all of senior management has been pretty busy the last few days, so I am not surprised we didn't get the package approved last week...but when you have a chance, could you check if the twitter launch materials are still with David? I just want to make sure they are still moving along...

Thanks!

The thread makes sense to me. I'll let Marissa weigh in too.
I wonder if we should run it by someone on the legal side before we go ahead with getting a translation...?

I think we could do with a couple of tweets on the subject of independence. Maybe we can do something with this line from our recent "statement" news release? (To be clear, I wouldn't use them back-to-back – but have a couple of different bits on the theme to insert from time to time)

Here are two additional tweets. Technically "one" of them is a thread of four tweets. Unofficially, I tested the tweets about major/minor on my partner, who knows nothing about the law and he said it made sense to him, so now it needs to pass the test of someone who does understand the law.

These are good! I don't think we can get away with using a British Lord Chief Justice's quote, though. I don't suppose any Canadian SC judges have said anything along the same lines?

Yes, we will probably want to tackle the distinct roles – but that could also come in set #2 of tweets, it's probably a LITTLE on the nose for the next few weeks at least.

Subject: Updated Twitter plan for March and followers list
Attachments: PSPC Twitter Plan March 2019.docx; Accounts to follow on Twitter.docx; Government of Canada Initiativebased Twitter Accounts to Follow.docx

I've updated the daily Twitter plan for March, in hopes that we'll be ready to launch by next week fingers crossed.

I've copied many of the photos into a folder within the Social Media folder, so they're easy to find when we're ready to schedule the tweets. COMMUNICATIONS > MEDIA > SOCIAL MEDIA > TWITTER VISUALS

The follower list includes every Canadian police service Twitter account I could find (new accounts highlighted in yellow). I couldn't find one for the Chief Electoral Officer, but I saw they were recently looking for someone to work on their social media, so I wonder if that will be coming up soon. I also included initiative-based accounts in a separate document, but they can be combined.

It's the single-folder one that looks fuzzy – might just be me, though.
And yes, for the purposes of approval, it's easiest to print them out (Kathleen et al don't have access to our shared folders)

In the interests of not adding too much new information – and therefore of getting this approved and ready to go quickly – let's leave the initiatives for round 2. OK, I will put initiatives on the backburner for now.

For elections, it's not the Chief Electoral Officer we would want, it's the Commissioner of Canada Elections - https://twitter.com/cef_cce Well, that explains why I couldn't find the Chief Electoral Officer.

And, in the twitter plan, let's leave the agents aside for week 1 (add them back in week 3 or so), and stick in one of our new independence tweets instead – let's foreground the subject that is drawing attention at the moment. I will add an independence tweet in as soon as the translations are ready and save the agents tweet for another time. I can also add an independence tweet in each week. Or more often if you like.

On the visuals, do we have a higher-quality version of the graphic from the annual report? That one is looking a little fuzzy to me. Which annual report image? We have the single folder and the three folders.

We should probably also include the visuals that haven't already been pre-approved (so the mallard ducks and the train) in the package, so as not to spring a surprise on anyone. Is it easiest to print off those images for approval?

Subject: Updated Twitter plan for March and followers list

I've updated the daily Twitter plan for March, in hopes that we'll be ready to launch by next week fingers crossed.

I've copied many of the photos into a folder within the Social Media folder, so they're easy to find when we're ready to schedule the tweets. COMMUNICATIONS > MEDIA > SOCIAL MEDIA > TWITTER VISUALS

The follower list includes every Canadian police service Twitter account I could find (new accounts highlighted in yellow). I couldn't find one for the Chief Electoral Officer, but I saw they were recently looking for someone to work on their social media, so I wonder if that will be coming up soon. I also included initiative-based accounts in a separate document, but they can be combined.

Hi again Jeff,

Please see interview request below from CTV, as well as my proposed response.

"The PPSC twitter account launched this week; a number of pre-written tweets explaining a little about the PPSC and its work are scheduled over the coming weeks.

An interview is not possible. The PPSC is a non-partisan organization, free from political influence and it would be inappropriate for the PPSC to comment on the testimonies given at committee."

Any concerns with this response?

Thanks

Nobody "requested" any specific tweets – we prepared a package of proposed tweets and circulated it for approval. There were some added and some removed in that process, and some edited... what if we roll up those last two questions and just say

"The tweet was part of a package of tweets prepared for the launch of the PPSC twitter account, and circulated for approval to PPSC Senior Management and the DPP"

Does that make sense?

The PPSC twitter account launched this week; a number of pre-written tweets explaining a little about the PPSC and its work are scheduled over the coming weeks.

Was this requested by the Justice Minister/ Attorney General?
No

Who requested this tweet?

Not sure about this one. How did this all happen? Did the DPP request that the tweets be prepared before we launched? Or was it part of a package that was prepared and then sent to her?

Who approved it?

The Director of Public Prosecutions approved all tweets before the account was launched.

We've been responding to reporters asking about the timing with the following:

"The PPSC twitter account launched this week; a number of pre-written tweets explaining a little about the PPSC and its work are scheduled over the coming weeks."

We've also been asked a couple of times if it's in response to the PM or to the SNC-Lavalin issue, and we've said no.

I actually think, in the absence of any further excitement, the reaction will die down. But I'm happy to discuss further.

Why did the Public Prosecution Service tweet about the need to allow prosecutions to proceed without political interference just two hours after Prime Minister Justin Trudeau finished a press conference where he insisted nothing inappropriate had happened in the SNC-Lavalin affair? Hi Jeff,

We’ve received (so far) 4 media requests about our tweet this morning on prosecutorial independence, regarding its timing and intent. You can see below the questions received from Hill Times. The other 3 are variations of the first two questions below.

As you can see, Elizabeth and I worked out a proposed response. Is there anything you'd like to add or change to the response below?

All 4 requests have a deadline of ASAP.

Thanks, Nathalie

What prompted the PPSC to issue that tweet now?

The PPSC twitter account launched this week; a number of pre-written tweets explaining a little about the PPSC and its work are scheduled over the coming weeks.

Was that tweet a way for the PPSC to express concern about political interference in its operations? No

Is the PPSC concerned about political interference in its work? If so, were there attempts to interfere in the work of the PPSC in relation to the Admiral Mark Norman case?

"The PPSC has not sought or received instructions in respect of the prosecution of Mr. Norman from the Privy Council Office or any other government department or body. https://www.ppsc-sppc.gc.ca/eng/nws-nvs/2019/12_02_19.html"

Does the PPSC believe the Prime Minister's Office attempted to politically interfere with its work on the SNC-Lavalin case?

The PPSC is a non-partisan organization, free from political influence. It would be inappropriate for the PPSC to comment on the recent issues reported in the media.

And I think the answer to CBC is no and no.

Is there a concern about the independence of the prosecution?

We'll start with Jeff, see what he says. We actually launched yesterday morning, but the first couple of tweets were not nearly so exciting, apparently (for the record, the next one is a recruitment post). So, my thoughts:

What prompted the PPSC to issue that tweet now?

The PPSC twitter account launched this week; a number of pre-written tweets explaining a little about the PPSC and its work are scheduled over the coming weeks.

Was that tweet a way for the PPSC to express concern about political interference in its operations? No (agreed — let's be direct here)

Is the PPSC concerned about political interference in its work? If so, were there attempts to interfere in the work of the PPSC in relation to the Admiral Mark Norman case?

No and no (not really sure about this one — can we be that direct or do we want a little more

I think we can be pretty direct — we can point to the press release on this one: https://www.ppsc-sppc.gc.ca/eng/nws-nvs/2019/12_02_19.html

"The PPSC has not sought or received instructions in respect of the prosecution of Mr. Norman from the Privy Council Office or any other government department or body."

Does the PPSC believe the Prime Minister's Office attempted to politically interfere with its work on the SNC-Lavalin case?

Why did the Public Prosecution Service tweet about the need to allow prosecutions to proceed without political interference just two hours after Prime Minister Justin Trudeau finished a press conference where he insisted nothing inappropriate had happened in the SNC-Lavalin affair?

Hi,

Can someone there give me a call to provide some context or elaboration on the tweet that you just issued?

Importance: High

Can we flip tomorrow's tweet for something like March 12ths? I'm not sure we want to raise rule of law tomorrow given today's reaction.
